

Championship Weekend Predictions

The championship weekend is here, just 4 teams left and all 4 teams have a real shot of making the superbowl a reality. Could it be a 3 peat? Could Josh Allen take his side there for the first time? Was Saquon the missing piece? Or can the rookie sensation Jayden Daniels go on?

With the Championship games I am going to do more of an overall rather than pointing out a certain players.

Bills @ Chiefs

It's two of the absolute very best quarterbacks who go head to head once again. Allen got the better of Mahomes in the regular season. Both sides will be wanting the defence to stop the other in this one.

The run game has been huge for the Bills this year. It's been led by James Cook but has had great support not just from Josh Allen but also Ty Johnson and Ray Davis. I believe this to be the key to this match up. The Chiefs defense has been solid all year but their run defence and keeping rushing quarterbacks in the pocket has also been vital. So the front 7 of the Chiefs will be wanting to slow the run down and force Allen into mistakes that in all fairness he hasn't done this season.

On the flip side Mahomes will once again be leaning on his relationship with Travis Kelce who always seems to step up in the late season. Kelce was exceptional against the Texans and the Chiefs will want the same again. It will be interesting to see how the Bills plan for Kelce and who lines up against him.

I have this one the lowest scoring game, I have gone back and forth with who wins it as well as I do think it's a tough game to call. However the Chiefs bye week seems to have rejuvenated them at the right time once again so my head says Chiefs by a field goal. My heart does however want to see Josh Allen and the Bills make the jump as Allen is my MVP on the year.

Bills 24-25 Chiefs.

Commanders @ Eagles

This is a scintillating match-up. The NFC championship comes down to two NFC East sides. In the season they are 1 and 1 against each other. Which makes it an even bigger game in my opinion.

For the Commanders on defence they have to start by doing the one thing nobody has been able to do this season. Stop Saquon Barkley. It does seem the impossible task but Dan Quinn has to find a way. Saquon has been key to the hugely successful season for the Eagles. Mike Sainristil could be a key player, the nickel corner has been all over the field over the last couple of games and maybe someone to watch in this battle.

The Commanders offensively are going to have the Offensive Rookie Of The Year to lead them into this one. Jayden Daniels has been phenomenal. Every game he impresses more and more. He makes the right decisions, whether it be in passing or rushing. He is the key for the Commanders. If he gets going we have seen him put up big numbers this year against the Eagles as well.

This is another coin flip. However I do think the Saquon Barkley factor is too strong to ignore. The Commanders also won the regular season game going up against Kenny Pickett when Hurts was injured. It will be close and it will be a shootout but I have the Eagles by 4.

Commanders 30-34 Eagles.